As the current caretakers of this historic 52 year-old base, we in the Air Force Reserve take pride in our operations at Westover and our service to this nation.

This base was an important training site during World War II. The Norden bombsight, a piece of state-of-the-art high technology, was placed aboard B-17 "Flying Fortresses" here before they flew to Europe. During the Berlin Airlift, Westover was an important hub for humanitarian services.

In the early 1950s, Westover AFB was operated by the Military Air Transport Service and serviced Europe. From 1956 until 1974, the Strategic Air Command launched thousands of B-52 bombers, KC-135s, and DC-97 tankers from these runways.

The Air Force Reserve has operated Westover since 1974 and based C-123s and C-130s here. The end of Westover's half-century was marked by the acquisition of 16 C-5As. This conversion has led to many successful missions such as relief flights to Armenia following the earthquake in February of 1989, and to St. Croix, Puerto Rico, and Charleston, S.C. following Hurricane Hugo in September of 1989. Westover's C-5s also played a role in recovering the bodies of the U.S.S. Iowa explosion victims in April 1989, and in Operation Just Cause in Panama in December of 1989 and January of 1990.

The next half-century has started, equally as auspicious. Following on the heels of Westover's Golden Anniversary celebration, The 337th MAS was called into service to support Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. Westover continued to fly relief missions to Kurdish refugees who had fled from Iraq and the base warmly greeted more than 30,000 returning Persian Gulf veterans who landed here around the clock. In December of 1991 and into 1992, Westover once again assumed the role of humanitarian airlift by flying food and supplies to the former Soviet Union.

We at Westover take great pride in the heritage of this base and the tremendous support of our friends and neighbors in the cities and towns of the Pioneer Valley. Members of the 439th Airlift Wing are very honored to host you. We hope you enjoy your visit to Westover Air Force Base.

JAMES P. CZEKANSKI, Col., USAFR
Commander, 439th Airlift Wing

WESTOVER AFB

For over half a century Westover Air Force Base has been an important national asset and a highly visible public reminder of the challenges facing the United States.

Just days after the German invasion of Poland sparked World War II, the massive "Northeast Airbase" authorized by Congress in 1939 was sited between Chicopee and Ludlow, Massachusetts. On April 6, 1940, the airbase was dedicated as Westover Field to honor Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, the former Army Air Corps chief who advocated strategic airpower.

General Westover, nicknamed "Tubby" and regarded as America's "Number One Flier," was a pioneer of military aviation.

After joining the army in 1901, the general became a balloonist and pilot and was eventually appointed the first chief of the Army Air Corps. Once in the top pilot's spot, he began to rebuild the American air arm. His purchasing decisions affected the outcome of World War II, a battle he would never live to see. He died on Sept. 21, 1938 at age 55, in a fiery airplane crash near Burbank Calif.

Westover Field was designed as an attack base because the War Department feared the loss of Great Britain and a possible invasion of Greenland and Canada. Westover's neighbors endured black-out conditions and trained as aircraft spotters. After the Battle of Britain, the Westover mission changed to training. From bases around the nation, pilots, bombardiers, navigators and aerial gunners came to Westover to be molded into aircrews for the Eighth Air Force operating out of England.

At the dawn of East-West confrontations, Westover became the headquarters of the Eastern Division of the Military Air Transport Service. The base reflected America's concern and became the U.S. hub for the Berlin Airlift in 1948. As relief supplies were loaded aboard MATS airlifters, local citizens assembled handkerchief parachutes to deliver candy to children in the Allied Sector of Berlin. Thus the "Little Vittles" nickname was born.

As the Cold War intensified in the mid-1950s, Westover AFB became the headquarters of the Eighth Air Force and the main runway was widened and lengthened to accommodate Strategic Air Command B-52s and KC-135s. Local residents endured the around-the-clock roar of SAC bombers and tankers as the nation faced a series of crises in Berlin, Cuba, and around the globe. During the Vietnam War, Westover crews were assigned bombing missions and rotated to Southeast Asia.

When conscription ended and the "Total Force" concept was initiated, Westover AFB again reflected the needs of the nation and the Air Force Reserve took control of the base. The 439th Tactical Airlift Wing flew C-123s and C-130s with AFRES pilots.

The era of the C-5A Galaxy, the largest aircraft in the United States Air Force inventory, began at Westover in 1987 with the arrival of the first of 16 massive planes assigned to the base today. Following the mission change, Westover AFB became headquarters to the 439th Military Airlift Wing.

The Wing has participated in a variety of world-wide missions ranging from strategic airlift to humanitarian aid. In Dec. 1989, the 439th MAW flew the first in a series of eight missions to war-torn Panama in support of "Operation Just Cause." When Saddam Hussein ordered Iraqi troops to invade tiny Kuwait on Aug. 2, 1990, Westover aircrews were again ready to lend a hand. They immediately volunteered to rush troops and supplies to the region, and were officially activated three weeks later in support of "Operation Desert Shield."

At the conclusion of the Gulf War, Westover's role came full circle in supporting missions reminiscent of the ones it had flown during the Berlin Airlift, by carrying relief supplies to aid Kurdish refugees who had fled from Iraq.

In December 1991 Westover played another role dating back to its World War II years in flying simultaneous missions with the Soviet Union. These new missions were ones of "Hope" to supply food, clothing and medical supplies to the newly forming Commonwealth of Independent States in the former Soviet Union.

In February 1992, the 439th MAW became the 439th Airlift Wing, its name changed, but its mission remained the same. Westover continues to play the role it started over half a century ago, a role that reminds one of the 18th Century Massachusetts militia, to support America and the world by coming when its country calls.

BILLETING

Visiting Officer Quarters for military personnel and their dependents are available. Reservists must make reservations for their next UTA by the Wednesday following their present UTA. Arrangements can be made either by visiting building 2201, located next to the 439th USAF Clinic, or by calling x2700, during the following hours:

Sunday - Thursday:	0600 to 0200
Friday & Saturday:	Open 24 hours

The Billeting office also provides a Continental Breakfast from 0600 to 1000.

WESTOVER CONSOLIDATED CLUB

The Westover Consolidated Club is the social gathering facility for its military members, civilian and retired military personnel, and federal employees, as well as their guests and families.

This modern facility features a casual lounge, a formal cocktail lounge, a main ballroom, private meeting rooms, and a cashier's office.

The main dining room is a perfect balance between comfort and elegance. Lunch and dinner are served daily and breakfast is served on the weekends.

There's also plenty of entertainment at the club including live bands, Bingo on Mondays and Thursdays, Disc Jockeys on Fridays, and a high-powered juke box.

RECREATION

The Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR) division offers year-round sports activities such as basketball, swimming and weightlifting. Personnel are encouraged to participate in various intramural and varsity sports. Outdoor facilities include baseball/softball fields (one lighted), a swimming pool, and three tennis courts.

The Gym includes a 22-piece Nautilus weight-lifting system and seven "Lifecycle" exercise bicycles, along with a rowing machine, a "stairmaster", and a "tread-ex" machine.

Competitive sports areas include racquetball, handball, squash, and basketball courts, as well as an area to play badminton. Weight-lifting equipment and a Centurian Universal Gym provide a thorough facility for body-building and muscle-toning. Some facilities are used by appointment only to insure equal playing time.

The gym also features steam, sauna, shower, and locker rooms, as well as a whirlpool bath.

The Recreation Center includes a giant color television, a game room complete with fuss-ball and bumper pool, as well as three pool and ping-pong tables.

The Center also features a Video Rental Store, which offers over 2,000 movies to choose from.
